It is suggested that the residents of the submerged district, or of lowlands subject to annual or occasional inundation, should place their frame dwellings on locust posts three or four feet bigh, and well boarded in at the sides, the whole being securely anchored down. If this suggestion were adopted in Chester, the submerged dwellings, getting good ventilation beneath, would soon dry out; they would have a good cellar for the safe storage of coal etc., the property would be enhanced in value, and the family would enjoy better health, as well as a constant sense of security from destructive inundation by water. The suggestion is very practical and worthy of attention.
